Defeat the GrayKey box!

In iOS 12, Apple has implemented a "Disable USB Access" access feature that blocks the ability for the iPhone to transfer data to a USB device, like the GrayKey, if the correct passcode hasn't been entered on the device in the last 60 minutes. That timeframe is way too short for the GrayKey to work its security-defeating magic. In other words, Apple is bricking the GrayKey and other devices like it. That's bad news for Grayshift and the organizations that have shelled out up to $30,000 for its box. (Cellebrite reportedly charges even more for its unlocking technology.)
